PREFACE

We are living in a period of keen interest in holiness, pentecostal and revivalistic movements which have appeared during the past 100 years. Books have been written about these movements and bibliographies compiled. Dr. A. B. Simpson and the C. & M. A. exercised some impact and influence upon these movements, indeed were a part of them.

My interest was aroused in the literature of these movements several years ago and especially in the bibliographical data regarding Simpson and the Alliance. Ignoring for the present the abundant and significant pages that were written about the Alliance and Simpson, my concern centered in the deficiencies and inaccuracies of some of the bibliographical data. I decided to find out "Why?"

The colleges of the C. & M. A. have a reasonably adequate collection of Simpson's books and Alliance literature. Donald McKaig, in a Ph.D. dissertation he wrote in 1948, compiled a list of all of Simpson's books he could readily locate. His list is the best to date and records the bibliographical data that he found in the books. But it was not his purpose to question the accuracy of the data nor to determine correct data. Neither did he purpose to ferret out all that Simpson may have written, or to analyze the nature of his writings. Nobody to date has undertaken a solution of these three problems. Therefore researchers and writers of the holiness, pentecostal and revivalistic movements reflected the information available to them with its deficiencies and inaccuracies.

My desire to correct this situation led me to undertake this research. A primary source to provide some answers appeared to be Simpson's periodicals. He began to publish periodicals in February 1880 and continued to do so throughout his lifetime. They are perpetuated in the current Alliance Witness. He also published another periodical for five years (July, 1902 - September 1907) - a monthly, entitled Living Truths. In all of his periodicals he persistently advertised his books, booklets, tracts, etc. that were being issued from his publishing company. Furthermore there were sermons and/or articles by Simpson printed in almost every issue of the periodicals. Therefore, to compile adequate bibliographical data of Simpson's writings, it became clear that his periodicals contained the answers.

From February of 1880 through June of 1889, Simpson published a periodical every month. Each issue varied in length from 32 pages to 64 pages, and sometimes more. During these nine and a half years the publication of sermons was rare, articles more frequent. For four of these years, 1886-1889, Simpson published each month a booklet that contained his Sunday morning sermons. They were called Tabernacle Sermons. The booklets were then compiled into books - eleven of them.

In August of 1889 the monthly periodicals became a weekly of 16 pages, except for a brief period, December 1898 - May 1899, when the periodicals reverted to a monthly issue of 32 pages. The weekly periodicals over a year's span totaled about 832 pages.

From the middle of June 1889 a sermon by Dr. Simpson appeared in virtually every issue of his periodicals. Sometimes the date was printed and the place it was preached, (usually the Gospel Tabernacle, NYC). Most often the Sunday morning sermons were printed and usually published within a week or two after the time preached. Then periodically he gathered together groups of sermons of similar theme and published them in a book. Each new publication was duly advertised. Obviously this type of data would provide a reasonably accurate chronology of Simpson's writings. The following bibliography is the result of this research.

Incidentally, there are more than 500 of Simpson's sermons published in the periodicals that have never been published in book form. (See Note 1. appended to the Chron. listing) Remember that from July 1889 through the year 1916 there is the possibility of some 1375 weekly sermons. Also, there are sermons published in books that did not appear in the periodicals, a few more than the Tabernacle Sermons mentioned above.

It was also learned that copyright dates in Simpson's books, if they were imprinted, did not necessarily reflect the time of the composition of the contents. Too, many of his books are not dated. Then, sometimes a book and its date did not indicate that it had been previously published. You will find some of Simpson's books dated as late as 1925 and 1932. He died in 1919.

The question may be asked why is an accurate dating of Simpson's publications important? The answer is that in order to trace his thought, his views, or to understand the situation in the Church, in the Alliance and in the world scene to which Simpson was addressing himself, dates are important.

One more item, - the nature of Simpson's writings. Was he a devotional writer? He has been thus characterized and he did publish seven devotional books. Maybe one should ask, was he a devotional preacher? To the contrary, his sermons stirred and moved people into action. People not only committed themselves to missionary involvement, but committed themselves to Christ as Saviour, Sanctifier, Healer, and to the task of bringing back the King. A devotional writer? Only in part.

Simpson's sermons do not fit that category.

Are his books commentaries? They are certainly expositions of the Scriptures. They show his vast knowledge of the content of Scripture and inspire the reader's respect and confidence. But really only five of his books may be classified as commentaries, and that with reservations. Five of the first seven volumes of the Christ in the Bible series were written documents, lecture materials taught at the fledgling New York Missionary Training College. (See comments on the Christ in the Bible series.) But the remaining volumes of this series were sermons. Some books became part of the series after previous publication under another title. Some were added posthumously. Commentaries then are only a small percentage of his writings. (See Note² for the several categories of Simpson's publications.)

The following bibliography is divided into two parts:

1. A Chronological List of Simpson's publications
2. An Alphabetical List of Simpson's publications.

Part two is more than alphabetical. It includes the table of contents of each publication. This was done to assist those who have limited access to Simpson's publications and wish to know something of the scope and significance of his writings.

Throughout both parts you will find various comments that are designed to help your understanding of his books. A list of Simpson's Colportage Library is also included. These paper-backs were not new or different books from those listed in the bibliography. They are reprints of previous publications. You may locate some of them and wonder about their identity. Also included under "P" in the Alphabetical Listing are the titles and dates of Simpson's periodicals.

Chronological listing

Note: The numbers above were deduced from a chronological topical list of Simpson's sermons found in the periodicals and that were not published in books. An examination of all these sermons would insure the accuracy of the numbers.

Comments:

The above list is instructive when compared with the Chronological list of Simpson's books of sermons. The latter list shows that after 1905 Simpson only published four new books of sermons. Yet the list above shows that over the next twelve years, 1906-1917, Simpson published 354 sermons in the periodicals that were not published in books. But in the preceding twenty-three years, 1882-1905, there were only 242 sermons in the periodicals that were not published in books. The years 1906-1917 represent the more mature years of Dr. Simpson and certainly his more mature thought. A study of Dr. Simpson's views should take into account these 354 sermons. Also, should any of them be published in books for today's readers? The 242 unpublished sermons between 1882 and 1905 should also be considered.

Why didn't Simpson publish these 354 sermons in books? He did not publish a book on Proverbs, yet he preached 15 sermons from Proverbs that were not published in any book.

The same is true of Jeremiah, - 13 sermons; Ezekiel, - 8 sermons; Daniel, - 9 sermons; the Minor Prophets, - 29 sermons; and on the list could go.

Did he reckon that the Christian market already had a sufficient number of his books? Remember, he began his publishing enterprise because he felt that hungry, consecrated Christians needed the truth God had imparted to him. To realize this concern he published scores of his own books and some 32,000 pages of religious materials in his periodicals.

Or were his responsibilities in the Alliance so time consuming that the editing and publishing of books was not a priority? Whatever the answer, there are a large quantity of his sermons that deserve our attention.

Note 2. The Categories of Simpson's Publications

The following categories of Simpson's books were deduced from The Chronological List. Publications which were a duplication of previous books are not included. The number of books in each category is given to the right.
